

Wednesday 5 August 2015 at 2.00pm

Martin Parrott

Learner Preferences and Affective Learning

This talk is based on classroom research into learner preferences. It explores different dimensions of 'affective learning' and evaluates their appropriateness in different learning contexts. Audience participation will be welcomed.

Martin Parrott began teaching English Language and Literature in mainstream comprehensive schools in 1999, after many years working in ELT for International House, the BBC and the Universities of London and Bristol. From 2004-12 he worked at the Lycée Français Charles De Gaulle, London. He maintains his interest in grammar, teacher education and educational management. His most recent publication is the 2nd edition of Grammar for English Language Teachers (Cambridge University Press, 2010).